106832	The South Forms Own Nation	Political Cartoon	By the time Abraham Lincoln was elected president in 1860, the differences between the North and the South had grown so vast that the United States of America, less than a century old, was torn apart. In the two months following the election, conventions were called in seven southern states to discuss secession from the Union. Assemblies in South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, and Texas voted to secede. On February 4, 1861, delegates from these states met in Montgomery, Alabama, to create a new nation, the Confederate States of America. Within five days they had adopted a provisional constitution and elected a provisional president, former senator Jefferson Davis. The pro-Union cartoon shown here, titled "The Dis-United States," shows the newly formed Confederate states arguing among themselves. It is prophetic--while the young Confederacy was united by its support of slavery and its drive for independence, regional differences and internal dissent would plague its brief existence. 106665	Crockett, Davy	Photograph	David Crockett was born in Limestone, near Greeneville, Tennessee. He fought in the Creek War under General Andrew Jackson from 1813 to 1814, and then turned to politics. Crockett served in the Tennessee State Legislature in 1821 and went on to serve three terms in Congress: 1827-1829, 1829-1831, and 1833-1835. Crockett was known in the House for his backwoods manner and homespun, humorous comments. After losing a bid for reelection in 1835, Crockett left Tennessee for Texas, where he died defending the Alamo. Outrageous tales of his exploits on the frontier have made him an American legend. 106748	The Mexican War	Photograph	The Mexican War, fought from 1846 to 1848, began when Mexico objected to the United States's annexation of Texas. It was caused by the desire of many Americans, including President James K. Polk, to add new territory to the United States. The war was a triumph for the United States: on September 24, 1847, American troops under General Winfield Scott marched into Mexico City, Mexico's capital, and on February 2, 1848, the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo was signed. The Mexican War influenced the Civil War in both its cause and its conduct. The vast territories won by the United States from Mexico were soon settled, and as the territories prepared to become states, the question of whether they were to be admitted to the Union as free or slave states sparked intense debate and widened the gap between North and South. Also, many of the generals, both Union and Confederate, who fought the Civil War first saw combat as part of the American force in Mexico. Robert E. Lee was a captain of engineers and a favorite of General Winfield Scott, while young Ulysses S. Grant was a regimental quartermaster. Many of these officers had been at West Point together; thus, during the Civil War, Union and Confederate leaders not only knew each other personally, but were aware of each other's strengths and weaknesses as commanders.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/106748	6 - 8 9 - 12

106861	The Red River Campaign	Photograph	The Red River campaign, conducted by Union general Nathaniel Banks from March 10, to May 22, 1864, was a confused, unsuccessful expedition whose stated goals were to capture Shreveport, Louisiana, and to drive the Confederates from the Red River Valley. The Union also wanted to occupy this cotton-rich area and eventually advance into Texas in order to discourage the French regime in Mexico from intervening in the war on the Confederacy's behalf. The valley had little strategic value, and the many skirmishes and minor battles that comprised the campaign usually ended indecisively. In late April the Union forces on land finally pulled out of the valley in order to retreat to Alexandria, Louisiana, but the flotilla of gunboats that had supported them on water were stuck due to the rapidly falling river level. A Union colonel from the region saved the gunboats by ordering the construction of dams to raise the water level. A sideshow to the more important campaigns that were being conducted in Virginia, the Red River campaign gained nothing of value, materially or strategically, for the Union. 106974	Civil War Songs	Photograph	The Civil War took place at a time when all Americans--soldiers and civilians--liked to sing. Most of the war songs enjoyed by Union and Confederate fighting men were played or sung during lulls in the fighting when troops sought to entertain themselves. The songs of the Civil War were usually sentimental ballads or rousing patriotic anthems; some of the more famous tunes include "Lorena," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "The Yellow Rose of Texas," and "Just Before the Battle, Mother." On some evenings between battles, impromptu concerts were held across the lines: a Union regiment's band would play Yankee songs, then break into "Dixie" and other southern songs, much to the delight of the Confederates.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/106974	6 - 8 9 - 12
107202	The End of Reconstruction	Photograph	During Reconstruction (1865-1877), the federal government had assumed, to a great extent, direct control of the former Confederate states. The year 1877 marked the end of Reconstruction; radicals (often called carpetbaggers) no longer controlled any of the ex-Confederate states. In reaction to the radicals' rule, conservatives won control in Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Texas. By the summer of 1876, the radicals controlled only Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina. In January 1877 carpetbag rule ended in Florida with the inauguration of George F. Drew, the Democratic governor. Federal troops were also withdrawn from South Carolina and Louisiana that year. Shown is an engraving that appeared in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper depicting a demonstration of the citizens of Columbia, South Carolina, on the return of Governor Wade Hampton, a former Confederate general. 107206	The Cattle Drive	Photograph	The practice of driving cattle to market did not become widespread until after the Civil War. While cattle drives across the Great Plains were quite dangerous to man and herd, the possibility of enormous profits drove the cattle drivers onward. The Kansas towns of Abilene and Dodge City were the final destinations of many drives. There, ranchers could expect nearly ten times the price for their herds as they could in Texas. From Kansas, the herds were shipped east or led farther north to stock the ranges. 107230	Frontier Justice and the Judicial System	Photograph	Out on the frontier, the jury system was slow to develop. For many years, justice was little more than "an eye for an eye." Local sheriffs would hunt down lawbreakers and shoot it out. By the late nineteenth century, however, many townspeople came to realize that a true court system, with consistent procedures of trial and punishment, was needed. Although district judges were appointed by the federal government, many obstacles remained. District judges had to travel long distances, and many areas were so sparsely populated that filling a jury could be difficult. Even when a jury could be found, some criminals, like the one shown here, refused to be taken in, courtroom trial or no courtroom trial. 107236	Cattle Trails and Railroads	Photograph	In 1867 Joseph McCoy came up with the idea of linking cattle trails to the railroads. He persuaded the leaders of Abilene, Kansas, to let their town serve as the first cattle shipping point. Within sixty days McCoy built a thriving business complete with a stockyard capable of holding three thousand head of cattle. He hired agents to find wandering herds and to drive them to Abilene. By the 1880s over four million Texas steers had been shipped by McCoy to Chicago and points eastward. 107315	The Autobiography of Charles Siringo, Western Cowpuncher	Photograph	According to his popular autobiography, Charlie Siringo worked on the Texas-Kansas cattle drives. Just how accurate the tales he related in his life story are, however, is open to speculation. The country's hunger for stories by "cowboy authors" who mythologized the Wild West produced many entertaining tales that were, more often than not, taller than a ten-gallon hat. 107398	Vigilante Justice in Texas	Photograph	The American West was settled mostly by men. The widespread use of guns and liquor created a great deal of violence, not only between Native Americans and settlers, but also among the settlers themselves. The marshals of that time were responsible for keeping the peace in great areas. They were overworked, sometimes inexperienced, and in many cases were pitted against bands of gun-carrying frontiersmen and/or cowboys who chose to take matters into their own hands. For these reasons, frequently the criminal justice system did not prevail, and vigilante justice was practiced. In this photo, a man is lynched from a bridge in rural Texas for a crime that never went to court.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/107398	6 - 8 9 - 12

107483	Rogers, Will	Photograph	William Penn Adair Rogers was born in Oologah, Indian Territory (now Oklahoma). He quit school in 1898 to work as a cowboy in Texas. In 1902, while traveling in South Africa, he joined Texas Jack's touring Wild West Circus as a rope artist. He returned to the U.S. in 1904 and continued to perform in various vaudeville shows. Rogers gradually added joke-telling to his act, to the delight of his audiences. He joined the Ziegfeld Follies in 1915, and his wry humor became more popular as he turned to social and political topics. The "Cowboy Philosopher" also became one of America's first media celebrities, expanding his appeal through motion pictures, radio, and a syndicated newspaper column. He also published several books, including The Cowboy Philosopher on Prohibition (1919), Illiterate Digest (1924), and Letters of a Self-Made Diplomat to His President (1927). Ten days after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, Nimitz was given command of the Pacific fleet, with the rank of admiral. 107626	Dust Storms	Photograph	Dust storms compounded the problem of the depression when they swept across the Midwest. Beginning in Texas and Oklahoma around 1933, the storms eventually made their way as far as the Appalachian Mountains. In many areas dust accumulated in piles similar to snow drifts. Both parents died by the time he was seventeen, and he quit school to run his father's Hughes Tool Company, which came to be the base of his vast fortune. He moved to Hollywood in 1926 and began to produce motion pictures, including Hell's Angels (1930), Scarface (1932), and The Outlaw (1941), which introduced Jane Russell. At about this time, he began buying stock in a company that later became Trans World Airlines. Hughes set many world records flying planes that he built. Hughes Aircraft Company became a major defense contractor, and in 1966 he sold TWA for over $500 million. He was also active in real estate. In later life Hughes became a recluse, seeing only a few people and moving from one country to another. 107812	Bush, George W.: Forty-Third U.S. President	Photograph	George Walker Bush was the forty-third president and son of forty-first president, George Herbert Walker Bush. George W. Bush was born in Connecticut and grew up in Texas. He was educated at Yale University and Harvard Business School. Bush worked in the oil business from the mid-seventies to 1990, and entered the public eye as managing general partner of the Texas Rangers baseball team in 1989. In 1994, he became governor of Texas, unexpectedly beating a popular Democratic incumbent. He was reelected in 1998, becoming the only Texas governor ever to win back-to-back terms. In 2000 he ran for the presidency against Democrat Al Gore and won the office. The election was so close that the results were contested before the Supreme Court. Calling himself a "compassionate conservative," during his campaign, Bush pushed a large tax cut through Congress and supported funding for faith-based charities. His critics blasted his administration's environmental policies and its ties to big business, but partisan discord diminished after the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. The events of that day changed the administration's focus to domestic security and antiterrorism and led to American military campaigns in Afghanistan and Iraq. Bush won reelection in 2004, defeating Democratic senator John Kerry. In August 2005, Hurricane Katrina hit the Gulf Coast, causing devastation in New Orleans and surrounding areas. Critics accused the Bush administration and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) of responding slowly and ineffectively to the crisis. In 2007 Bush announced a troop surge in Iraq, with the aim of creating a stable environment for Iraqi citizens to exert more control over the management of the country. In 2008 the economy stalled as home prices fell, a subprime mortgage crisis emerged, and the price of gasoline rose dramatically.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/107812	6 - 8	9 - 12

He married Jacqueline Bouvier in 1953. Running against Richard Nixon, Kennedy won the presidency in 1960, due in part to his performance in the first televised presidential debates. His administration was marked by bold initiatives in domestic policy--active support for the space program, medical care for the aged, civil rights, and federal aid to education--but also by international tensions like the Bay of Pigs invasion and the Cuban Missile Crisis. Less than forty-eight hours after Kennedy's assassination, Oswald himself was gunned down by Jack Ruby, a Dallas nightclub owner, during a routine escort through a narrow jail corridor. Kennedy was shot and killed by Lee Harvey Oswald, a left-wing political extremist. Vice President Lyndon B. 109122	French Map Showing Hernando de Soto's Journey	Photograph	Although it was produced in France, the map shown here shows the journey of Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto through the Gulf Coast region in 1534. De Soto began his journey in present day Florida and moved northward into what would become Georgia and the Carolinas. From there he traveled west through Tennessee and northern Alabama. After seeing the Mississippi River, he crossed into present-day Arkansas and Oklahoma, before turning back toward Florida. When de Soto succumbed to fever in May 1542, his chief lieutenant took the expedition west into Texas.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/109122	6 - 8	9 - 12
109207	Gonzalez, Henry	Photograph	Henry Gonzalez was born in May 3, 1916, in San Antonio, Texas. His parents were descendants of the original colonists of the state of Durango in northern Mexico. A Democrat, Gonzalez served in the San Antonio city council from 1953 to 1956. He served as mayor pro tempore for part of the first term in 1956, and was later elected to the Texas state senate that year, where he served until his resignation on November 3, 1961. He was elected to the Eighty-seventh Congress on November 4, 1961, and reelected to the seventeen succeeding Congresses. His reelections have been attributed to his involvement in community development as well as antitrust legislation. Gonzalez served as chairman of the Select Committee on Assassinations from 1961 to 1997. He was chosen Chairman of the Banking, Financing, and Urban Affairs Committee in 1989, and served in that post until 1995. Gonzalez is widely recognized for his contributions to public affairs, and was awarded the distinguished Wayne Morse Integrity in Politics Award in 1994. He retired from Congress in 1997. 109224	Perot, H. Ross	Photograph	H. (Henry) Ross Perot was born on June 27, 1930, in Texarkana, Texas. In 1953 he graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland. In 1957, after serving in the navy for four years, he went to work for IBM (the International Business Machines Corporation). In 1962 he started his own computer company, Electronic Data Systems. When EDS went public in 1968, Perot became a billionaire. He sold his company to General Motors in 1984. Perot's nationwide popularity began when he announced his independent candidacy for president in 1992. Perot followers formed volunteer organizations all over the country to aid his campaign. Perot's approach to politics was a daring alternative to the two-party system (Republicans and Democrats), and the rhetoric of that system. To many citizens at the time, both parties were speaking only to one another and about one another--no longer were they reaching the people. An alarming number of Americans had simply stopped voting altogether. The federal deficit had reached astronomical proportions, and until Perot focused his campaign on the necessity of its reduction, neither party had adequately addressed the issue. Without the backing of either party, Perot reached a surprising number of voters by running his own powerful media campaign with his own money, and by adopting a fresh and unexpected approach to politics. His candid, often brazen, speaking style, combined with a sense of humor, quickly became his trademark. Perot's political strength grew, but much of the media criticized him, questioning his business practices. Perot lost the election to Arkansas governor Bill Clinton, finishing third behind incumbent president George Bush. He received 19 percent of the popular vote, making his independent presidential run the most successful third-party bid in eighty years. In 1995 Perot announced his plan to form a new political party, the Reform Party.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/109224	6 - 8	9 - 12

109260	Cisneros, Henry	Photograph	Henry Gabriel Cisneros was born in 1947 in San Antonio, Texas. Cisneros began his career as an administrative assistant in the San Antonio City Manager's office. He studied public administration as a graduate student at Harvard University and at George Washington University. From 1975 to 1981 he served as a member of the city council of San Antonio, Texas. In 1981 Cisneros was elected mayor of San Antonio, becoming the first Mexican American to be mayor of a major American city. In 1992 he was nominated by President Bill Clinton to serve as secretary of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). During his term in office, a Justice Department probe found that Cisneros had made inaccurate statements to federal authorities about payments he made to his former mistress and her daughter. The investigation sought to determine whether Cisneros had hidden information that would have prevented him from being chosen as HUD secretary. Shadowed by controversy, Cisneros stepped down from his post at the end of Clinton's first term in office, and was replaced by Andrew Cuomo. In 1997 Cisneros helped lead the President's Summit of Service in Philadelphia, to promote programs to aid college students.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/109260	6 - 8 9 - 12
109262	Pena, Frederico	Photograph	Frederico PeAa was born on March 15, 1947, in Laredo, Texas. After earning his law degree from the University of Texas in 1969, he worked in the private sector for a number of years before entering the world of politics. PeAa served four years in the state of Colorado's General Assembly and one year as Democratic leader of the state House. In 1981 he was named "Outstanding House Legislator." Two years later, he was elected mayor of Denver, Colorado--the first Hispanic American to hold that position. As mayor, PeAa won campaigns to build an international airport, a convention center, and a baseball stadium. Critics charged him with overspending, leading to increased municipal debt. He served as mayor until 1991. In 1993 PeAa was successfully nominated secretary of transportation by President Bill Clinton. In this post, he was also a target of critics who blamed him for not enforcing stricter safety standards, following the fatal 1996 crash of a ValuJet DC-9 in Florida, and several train collisions. In 1997, for Clinton's second term, PeAa was named secretary of energy, replacing Hazel O'Leary. Fifteen months later he announced his resignation claiming that he wished to return to private life because the demands of being a cabinet secretary were too much for his family. He stated that he would return to employment in the private business sector. During his brief tenure as energy secretary, PeAa continued the policy of his predecessor, that of declassifying cold-war-era documents. Notable was his dismissal of the management contractor of the Brookhaven National Laboratory, in Upton, N.Y., for failing to keep track of leaking contamination on the groundwater.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/109262	6 - 8 9 - 12
109288	Little Big Man Is Released	Photograph	In the Arthur Penn film Little Big Man, Dustin Hoffman stars as a white man who is adopted by Sioux Indians. The 1971 production was one of the first feature films to treat Native Americans as fully developed characters and represent Indian society as a complex hierarchy. The story is told from the point of view of Jack Crabbe (played by Hoffman), a 130-year-old survivor of "Custer's last stand." The 1868 massacre of an entire tribe by white soldiers at Washita River, Texas, is graphically depicted in the film. General George Armstrong Custer is portrayed as a borderline psychotic who ignores warnings about the strength and numbers of the Native Americans waiting for him at Little Bighorn. Following Kennedy's assassination on November 22, 1963, Johnson was sworn in as the 36th president of the United States. He served as president from 1963 to 1969, winning a term in his own right in 1964 by the biggest popular vote margin in U.S. history. Johnson's experience with poverty while growing up in rural Texas influenced his political agenda in the White House. He pushed for programs to improve education and healthcare, reduce crime, and achieve his vision of a "Great Society." The Civil Rights Act of 1964 was among Johnson's most notable achievements. S_6087	"The Bull-Dogger," Bill Pickett Poster	Photograph	Some African Americans who went west after the Civil War found work in the booming cattle industry. As many as one-third of the cowboys who drove cattle from Texas to midwestern markets were black; most of them freed slaves. A few saved up enough money to open their own ranches. Some went on to careers of some notoriety. Among these was the cowboy Nat Love, who became known as Deadwood Dick; after winning an open marksmanship competition in Deadwood, South Dakota. Another was Bill Pickett, a Texan of mixed African American and Native American descent. Born in 1870 to parents who were both former slaves, Pickett began his career after finishing the 5th grade. Within just a few years, he had begun exhibiting his roping, riding, and bulldogging skills throughout the West. So great was his talent that in time, he became an international star performing in Canada, Mexico, South America, and England, as well as in a number of early Hollywood movies. Despite his celebrity, he was banned from performing alongside whites because of his race. To avoid this ban, he was sometimes identified as Native American. S_8049	O'Keeffe, Georgia	Photograph	Born in Wisconsin in 1887, Georgia O'Keeffe enrolled in art lessons as a small child and at age 12 declared she would be a professional artist. She briefly studied at the Art Institute of Chicago before she moving to New York City to study at the Art Students League. Frustrated with the lack of interest in her work, O'Keeffe abandoned her childhood dream of becoming a professional artist and took up freelance commercial art. She soon gave that up and started teaching art in Texas. In the early 1920s, renowned gallery owner Alfred Stieglitz (whom O'Keeffe would later marry) saw some of her drawings and encouraged her to return to New York City and try again. The move proved successful for O'Keeffe, and her work was exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum of Art in 1927. O'Keeffe quickly gained a following, showing her modernist paintings of natural landscapes regularly through the 1930s and 1940s. She moved to Sante Fe, New Mexico, in 1949, and continued to paint until she died in 1986.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/S_8049	6 - 8	9 - 12

S_AMHC0032	Expedition of Francisco Coronado	Map	Inspired by the tales of golden cities told by earlier explorers like Álvar Núñez Cabeza de Vaca and Fray Marcos de Niza, Francisco Coronado set out to explore the American Southwest in 1540. Unfortunately for Coronado, these tales proved to be false; no riches were ever found. This map depicts both Coronado's main route, and the auxiliary routes taken by secondary members of the party. In July 1540, Coronado's party encountered and conquered the Zuni Indians of present-day New Mexico. While the main party stayed in the Zuni pueblos, another expedition, led by García López de Cárdenas set out to the west. These explorers were the first Europeans to see the Grand Canyon and the Colorado River. The two groups reconvened that fall and spent the winter at a site the Spanish called Tiguex, near modern Santa Fe. During their stay, they also visited pueblos in Taos and Pecos. In the spring of 1541, Coronado journeyed south into Texas and then, with about 30 men, proceeded north in search of a wealthy city called Quivira. Instead, he discovered a Wichita Indian village in present-day Kansas. Coronado's party returned to Tiguex in August 1541 and spent another winter with the Zuni before returning to New Galicia in 1542. Although the explorers encountered new peoples and an abundance of natural resources, the mission was considered to be a failure because it did not produce the fabulous wealth rumored to have existed in New Spain's northern territories.	0	https://learn360.infobase.com/titles/S_AMHC0032	6 - 8 9 - 12

Johnson lost the title to Jess Willard, another "white hope" boxer, in 1915. In forty-seven years of boxing, Johnson was knocked out only three times and lost only seven of his 114 bouts.
